How are children with SEN supported in primary school?

All mainstream schools have the necessary resources allocated to them, specifically to support children with SEND.

All schools/ settings have a special educational needs coordinator (SENCO)

The Senco is responsible for supporting and monitoring children with SEND.

All schools must publish a policy on the school website with information on how they support children with additional needs

The SEND Information Report will have information about how the school will identify, assess and make provision for children and young people with SEN and disabilities

Child with additional needs – looking at schools

- You can speak to the school about your child and give them any extra information you may have e.g. professional report
- You can ask to speak to the Senco about the kind of support the school can give your child
- Find out how the school communicates with parents and with all school staff, so that everybody who works with your child is aware of their support needs.

Sharing information with the school

- School staff may visit families at home before your child starts school or have a telephone conversation with parents
- You can tell the teacher/member of staff about your child's interests as well as any concerns you have about their development, social skills, independence, confidence, language and physical ability
- This can be the starting point of building a good relationship with the school and the school will have a better understanding of your child
- Ask about opportunities for your child to visit the school or watch a video of the classroom setting – there will be information on the schools' websites about what each school offers, so that children feel confident and safe and ready to learn

- In these cases a statutory assessment of their special educational needs may need to be undertaken in order to determine whether additional resources are required
- Parents can discuss concerns with the school Senco and class teacher who will have information on the progress of your child at school
- Eligibility for a statutory assessment is assessed by Enfield Council's Special Education Needs (SEN) Service, in conjunction with professionals.
- If your child has an EHCP, your SEN Advisory officer will advise you on the application process for your child
